The Master's Degree in Literature, recently evaluated and unconditionally approved by the A3ES, offers a complement of scientific training to Literature graduates, as well as to all those interested in Literature from other areas of study. It integrates two areas of specialization that, being complementary, develop different competences, providing a broadening of horizons in different fields of Literature and favoring interdisciplinarity in the field of Social and Human Sciences. The specialization in Comparative Literature Studies is not limited to a specific chronological period. It is understood that the central element is the concept of relationship, around which the other elements, methods and notional fields are organized.
