Universidade de Évora - Escola Superior de Enfermagem S. João de Deus

2. Coordenador(a)

Maria da Luz Ferreira Barros (mlb@uevora.pt)

3. Program description

Currently, in Portugal, some maternity wards and obstetric emergency units have been closing on a rotating basis, with the aim of addressing the shortage of human resources and ensuring safety during childbirth. In this context, there have been reported cases of births occurring before arrival at the hospital. Pre-hospital intervention in childbirth is a crucial component of care for women in situations of imminent delivery or obstetric emergencies.

4. Objectives

To equip nurses and doctors in the pre-hospital emergency system with basic knowledge and essential skills for identifying, stabilizing, and communicating effectively in urgent obstetric situations, without the intention of replacing specialized competencies.

To equip nurses and doctors in the pre-hospital emergency system with basic knowledge and essential skills in the context of initial support and transport of the pregnant woman/newborn to the hospital, without the intention of replacing specialized competencies.
